Then she goes on to the most substantial fib - that we "know to that decrease transmission and deaths," we need
"social distancing" (she does not use the term lockdown, but considering that's what we're now in, I can only assume that's what she means) and "testing"...

Meantime, @choo_ek is playing a slightly different game, trying to explain away in advance the fact that the end of lockdowns probably won't lead to problems (again, if Georgia et al are any guide), by telling us the end of lockdowns... doesn't really mean lockdowns have ended.

> Dr. Esther AT LEAST WEAR A MASK Choo @choo_ek

For example, on April 15, she tweeted that ending them would cause #SarsCov2 to spread "to an extent that will make our current infection & death rate laughable." Obviously, what's happened in Georgia and much of Europe make that statement ridiculous. So what's her argument now?

While the hysterics on Team Apocalypse still scream "WAIT TWO WEEKS," the more sophisticated now have a different argument: "There's so much we don't know" (and thus, implicitly, we can't take any chances).

Except: four months into this epidemic, there's so much we do know...

This @Facebook post purporting to prove that masks work is making the rounds (14K Twitter retweets from a single post). Typical Team Apocalypse misinformation/pseudoscience. Why? Bc #Sarscov2 is a VIRUS. It's far smaller than bacteria (and can't reproduce in a Petri dish anyway).

wearing a mask and one not. Shocking! The one on the left with no growth is the one I used a mask for! The one on the right where I didn't wear a mask is full of bacteria. So yeah, maybe cloth masks don't give you much protection, but they protect the people around you. Maybe wear one if you insist it's your constitutional right to eat at Chili's.

Team Apocalypse:

Wrong about infection fatality rate.
Wrong about overrun hospitals.
Wrong about wait two weeks.
Wrong about the end of lockdowns.
Wrong about the need for tests.
Wrong about Japan.

But hey, maybe they're right about masks - there's a first time for everything!

This post purporting to prove that masks work is making the rounds (14K Twitter retweets from a single post). Typical Team Apocalypse misinformation/pseudoscience. Why? Bc is a VIRUS. It's far smaller than bacteria (and can't reproduce in a Petri dish anyway).

wearing a mask and one not. Shocking! The one on the left with no growth is the one I used a mask for! The one on the right where I didn't wear a mask is full of bacteria. So yeah, maybe cloth masks don't give you much protection, but they protect the people around you. Maybe wear one if you insist it's your constitutional right to eat at Chili's.

without a mask. (From her public FB post.)

The people retweeting this come in two categories - those who have no idea about the difference between bacteria and viruses (the OMG LOOK group) and those cynics who know but don't care (you can tell them, bc they are careful not to say too much, they just present the image).

I haven't written about hospital layoffs in a while, but that's not because they're not still happening. This Minnesota hospital and clinic system just laid off 900 of its 14,500 employees; about as many are on unpaid furloughs through the end of July.

I'm old enough to remember when @cdcgov said we'd have 3,000 deaths a day by June 1 (a prediction made ~three weeks ago - long after @ihme_uw blew up). Yep, that prediction is going to prove as accurate as all the others. Don't worry, the media will be sure to update the mistake!

As Trump Pushes to Reopen, Government Sees Virus Toll Nearly Doubling

An internal Trump administration model projects a near-doubling of daily coronavirus deaths by June 1 as the nation begins to reopen, as well as a rapid rise in daily infections.

Undiagnosed infectious diseases alone is killing 2 times that of Covid.

Sick people are getting covid tested, 94% negative, then are sent home to suffer an undiagnosed illness. A negative covid test does not make you well!

Meanwhile, Denver - which before cannabis was fully legalized in Colorado was fairly safe - is having another terrible year for homicides and aggravated assaults. I hope one day I can get back to reporting the facts around cannabis, psychosis, and crime.

61% increase sounds like a lot until you realize it's an increase of only 8, I realize that 8 represents human lives but I wouldn't classify going from 13 to 21 "horrible". Also, most/all sex crimes are down. You're cherry-picking data.

Yep, wearing a mask "signifies" and "shows" plenty; what it DOESN'T do is slow the (nonexistent) outdoor spread of #SARSCoV2 - or, probably, the (v. limited) spread in offices/stores, unless you are actively symptomatic while you're wearing it.

Thanks for clearing that up, gov!

"In pooled analysis, we found no significant reduction in influenza transmission with the use of face masks," is pretty clear.

In my mind, the biggest weakness of the analysis (in a corona context) is the assumption that it spreads exactly like influenza.

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to "flatten the curve" - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a "surge" that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

I'm old enough to remember when [redacted] said we'd have 3,000 deaths a day by June 1 (a prediction made ~three weeks ago - long after [redacted] blew up). Yep, that prediction is going to prove as accurate as all the others. Don't worry, the media will be sure to update the mistake!

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbot-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatsler-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

Is the death rate lower once you control for age? I assume the prison population is very young compared to the country as a whole.

Age on the one hand, but comorbidities, gender, and race on the other. I haven't seen a good analysis. But it is clear the concerns the coronavirus would ravage prisons were as wrong as the rest of Team Apocalypse's predictions.

1/ So this tweet about pneumonia deaths in Florida, claiming the state usually has far fewer pneumonia deaths than it has had this year, is - how do I put this politely? - NOT TRUE. NOT AT ALL. (Though it has now been retweeted 4K+ times and is starting to take off.) Let's look.

Open mouth kisses outdoors, as an extreme example, are going to transmit virus no matter where you are. In aggregate, people are doing more deep kissing indoors, so population-level data may drive us to think some things are inherent to location rather than behavior.

But what mass incarceration does provide is a pool of communally housed people who can be mass tested for coronavirus - driving up the counts of "cases" nationally for weeks, while the media rarely reports that most of said cases are asymptomatic.

Great piece about how Japan beat coronavirus without hysterically destroying its economy or society: no lockdowns, no mass testing, no universal masking required. Two main steps - discourage clustering in gyms and bars, and use good hygiene. Crazy, huh? sciencemag.org/news/2020/05/j

Science*'s COVID-19 reporting is supported by the Pulitzer Center.

Japan yesterday declared at least a temporary victory in its battle with COVID-19, and it triumphed by following its own playbook. It drove down the number of daily new cases to near target levels of 0.5 per 100,000 people with voluntary and not very restrictive social distancing and without large-scale testing. Instead, the country focused on finding clusters of infections and attacking the underlying causes, which often proved to be overcrowded gathering spots such as gyms and nightclubs.

It's important to understand states continue to backdate deaths; finding out when people really died requires going into health department reports and some states don't report it at all (at least not publicly). But we know enough to be sure that figure doesn't represent reality.

If we can save even one life... deaths of homeless people have tripled in San Francisco in the last eight weeks - 48, compared to 14 in 2019. Number of deaths related to #SARSCoV2? Zero. Overdoses appear to be the issue. Total COVID deaths for ALL of San Francisco? 40.

The number of homeless people in San Francisco who died over a recent eight-week period spiked compared to the same time last year, an increase that officials say was likely driven by drug overdoses, underlying medical conditions and a disruption to shelter and services due to the coronavirus pandemic.

None appear to be directly related to the coronavirus that is spreading throughout the city, according to preliminary Department of Public Health data obtained by The Chronicle. It is not clear how many people

Forty-eight homeless people — an average of six per week — died in San Francisco between March 30 and May 24, according to Dr. Barry Zevin, director of the Department of Public Health's Street Medicine Team. For comparison, 14 people died in the same time period last year.

The data is preliminary; exact causes of death are pending until the medical examiner's office finalizes a report. But, Zevin said, most of the deaths were likely related to substance overdoses and were highly concentrated among unsheltered

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to "flatten the curve" - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that is not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a "surge" that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbler-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered [in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview]. You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

That's what I was thinking right from the beginning! If covid is a respiratory disease harming lungs.. shouldn't there be a pneumonia too? But if you look at cdc site, there are much less deaths from covid+pneumonia than just from covid..

I don't understand the medical terminology, but looking at Cook County IL death data, some of the COVID-19 related deaths are listed as "Acute Hypoxic Respiratory Failure", "Acute Hypercapnic Respiratory Failure", "Acute Respiratory Distress Syndrome", etc instead of pneumonia.

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbar-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has gifted coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbler-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Yep; that would be about 2.5% of a year's US deaths except that as @neil_ferguson himself pointed out, most would have occurred in 2020 anyway. Of course the lockdowns may cost so many lives from overdose, delayed treatment, etc, that overall mortality could be notably higher...

I really don't get what people don't understand about:

-The median age of death from SARS-CoV-2 is 81

-43% of all SARS-CoV-2 deaths are from nursing homes (higher if NY weren't fudging numbers)

-Life expectancy in the US is 78.6

All the recent "decarceration" has done is provide a useful real-world test of whether freeing criminals increases crime (spoiler alert: the answer appears to be yes). And the coronavirus death rate in US prisons is actually lower than the overall US rate...

But what mass incarceration does provide is a pool of communally housed people who can be mass tested for coronavirus - driving up the counts of "cases" nationally for weeks, while the media rarely reports that most of said cases are asymptomatic.

Remember:

Two months ago Team Apocalypse said we needed a million ventilators.
Six weeks ago we were running out of PPE.
Four weeks ago we had to wait two weeks.
Two weeks ago we needed a million tests - a day.
Now everyone has to wear a mask.

The joke isn't funny anymore.

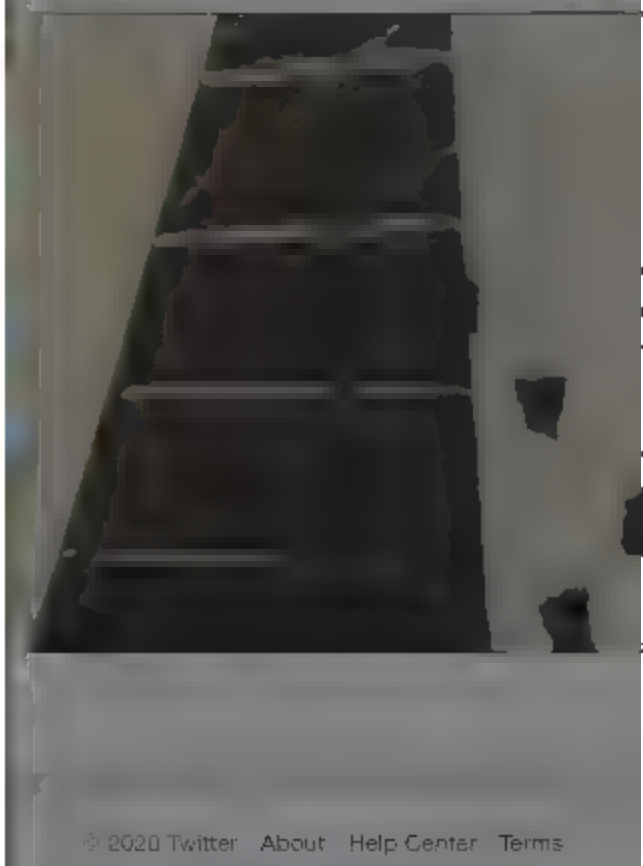
What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?



Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbler-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Alex,

Thank you for this. I have a few follow up questions I'd like to ask, below in red. They're questions I'd ask if you and I were sitting down for a live interview, so I assume they're fair game. Thanks again.

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to "flatten the curve" - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that is not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a "surge" that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

you don't do it Chotiner-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered [in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview]. You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

Alex,

Thank you for this. I have a few follow up questions I'd like to ask, below in red. They're questions I'd ask if you and I were sitting down for a live interview, so I assume they're fair game. Thanks again.

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

you don't do it Chotiner-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

What is the media getting wrong about the coronavirus crisis?

When and why did you personally start to doubt the official narrative of the COVID crisis?

What is your medical and public health background?

How do you answer people who say that the earliest, most dire projections of COVID's impact have been avoided

Yes. Figuring out how the virus attacks cells is hard; multivariate regression analysis is hard. But checking whether the data in a chart matches what's available from primary sources, whether a forecast matches reality... that's not hard. It just requires a willingness to ask.

Something similar was happening on Wall Street before 08; no one seemed to realize you could tranche garbage and try to hide risk forever, but if it was garbage, eventually it would blow up, and the losses would hit. Or maybe they realized and didn't care, because of the money.

See the original chart? It says the UK had ~300K infections at lockdown. Which was totally wrong, as [illegible] noted. The new chart says the UK had 20 infections per million people - which would be 300K if the UK's population was 15 billion. HOW DUMB DO YOU THINK WE ARE?

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to "flatten the curve" - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that is not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a "surge" that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

You have my answers. I was very clear on the terms of the interview. If you do anything but run them in one long single Q+A with no additional commentary, i will just publish this email chain when you run them, and people can judge for themselves whether you acted in good faith.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has gifted coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chotiner-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). Sheriffs need to step up during this situation. Seriously you took an OATH. Every sheriff in the country should be doing this. You will gain respect from those who voted for you which is mostly what they want. As a vet it annoys me that more cops are not stepping up during this.

No. The national numbers have the same discrepancy - they show 3,000-6,000 deaths per week, every week. (These are weekly figures - the US has on average 50,000-60,000 deaths a week, so 6% would be 3,000.)

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Why do you think the right and right-wing media have

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbler-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered [in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview]. You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

See the original chart? It says the UK had ~300K infections at lockdown. Which was totally wrong, as @boricuagato noted. The new chart says the UK had 20 infections per million people - which would be 300K if the UK's population was 15 billion. HOW DUMB DO YOU THINK WE ARE?

Article

As hospitals are scrambling to intensify their measures for protecting patients and health care workers from the virus, an increasing number of frontline providers are wondering whether this effort should include universal use of masks by all health care workers. Universal masking is already standard practice in Hong Kong, Singapore, and other parts of Asia and has recently been adopted by a handful of U.S. hospitals.

We know that wearing a mask outside health care facilities offers little, if any, protection from infection. Public health authorities define a significant exposure to Covid-19 as face-to-face contact within 6 feet with a patient with symptomatic Covid-19 that is sustained for a

Yes, you should probably dive a little deeper. Your chart with the 200-300/week deaths seems like it might be wrong. There's this which is the 3k-4k/year:

Right, the US figures show the same gap - weekly deaths total ~200K annually, sometimes more, but annual pneumonia figures are much lower. Given the arguments around #COVID classifications this strikes me as worth pursuing.

Alex,

Thanks, I appreciate your time, and agree to run the Q&A verbatim. The questions are:

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

What is the media getting wrong about the coronavirus crisis?

When and why did you personally start to doubt the official narrative of the COVID crisis?

What is your medical and public health background?

How do you answer people who say that the earliest, most dire projections of COVID's impact have been avoided

That's awfully impressive considering there are a total of 684 people hospitalized with #COVID in all of Connecticut right now, but no matter - even more reason for me to come. Can you set it up?

Connecticut coronavirus hospitalizations dropped again to 684. (Patch Media)

CONNECTICUT — The number of confirmed coronavirus cases in Connecticut dropped by 15 to 41,288 over the past 24 hours, while the number of deaths rose by 34 to 3,803. The current number of patients

Sheriffs need to step up during this situation. Seriously you took an OATH. Every sheriff in the country should be doing this. You will gain respect from those who voted for you which is mostly what they want. As a vet it annoys me that more cops are not stepping up during this.

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to "flatten the curve" - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a "surge" that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has sifted coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbar-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered [in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview]. You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbler-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered [in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview]. You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

Alex,

Thanks, I appreciate your time, and agree to run the Q&A verbatim. The questions are:

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

What is the media getting wrong about the coronavirus crisis?

When and why did you personally start to doubt the official narrative of the COVID crisis?

What is your medical and public health background?

How do you answer people who say that the earliest, most dire projections of COVID's impact have been avoided

Sheriffs need to step up during this situation. Seriously you took an OATH. Every sheriff in the country should be doing this. You will gain respect from those who voted for you which is mostly what they want. As a vet it annoys me that more cops are not stepping up during this.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I literally compared these things the other day. CDC keeps track of hospitalizations for both.

Unsurprisingly, flu is worse or equal until you get above 50, then you have about a 10% greater chance of getting hospitalized with covid.

The striking numbers appear at 65+.

Further, the University of Washington model was released after the lockdowns began, and explicitly accounted for their effects - yet it was still very wrong.

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. That's how I define acute crisis. Initially, we were told that the point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. One point that's occurred to me recently is that #SARSCoV2 is in a sweet spot of sorts to drive hysteria. Less dangerous and the Deathmeter (TM) etc would be absurd - but more and the media couldn't indulge panic porn, we'd all have to focus on serious issues like the food chain.

Kudos to Jason Kenney - premier of the Canadian province of Alberta - for being the first political leader to tell the truth about #SARSCoV2: "For most Albertans, the risk of death from other pathogens, accidents, and traffic fatalities is actually higher than it is for COVID."

Yes. Figuring out how the virus attacks cells is hard; multivariate regression analysis is hard. But checking whether the data in a chart matches what's available from primary sources, whether a forecast matches reality... that's not hard. It just requires a willingness to ask.

Something similar was happening on Wall Street before 08; no one seemed to realize you could tranche garbage and try to hide risk forever, but if it was garbage, eventually it would blow up, and the losses would hit. Or maybe they realized and didn't care, because of the money.

Why worry about your investments blowing up when you know that your bought-and-paid-for congressmen will bail you out?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. That's how I define acute crisis. Initially, we were told that the point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

No. The national numbers have the same discrepancy - they show 3,000-6,000 deaths per week, every week. (These are weekly figures - the US has on average 50,000-60,000 deaths a week, so 6% would be 3,000.)

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbar-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

What is the media getting wrong about the coronavirus crisis?

When and why did you personally start to doubt the official narrative of the COVID crisis?

What is your medical and public health background?

How do you answer people who say that the earliest, most dire projections of COVID's impact have been avoided

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Yes. Figuring out how the virus attacks cells is hard; multivariate regression analysis is hard. But checking whether the data in a chart matches what's available from primary sources, whether a forecast matches reality... that's not hard. It just requires a willingness to ask.

With cases on an overall decline, masks are a control to remind everybody to continue to be scared. As we go back to work & life, if that visual reminder wasn't there, it would be too easy for people to slip back into their regular lives and forget.

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

4/ Ferguson now predicts that the epidemic in the U.K. will peak and subside within "two to three weeks" - last week's paper said 18+ months of quarantine would be necessary.

Alex Berenson

5/ One last point here: Ferguson gives the lockdown credit, which is interesting - the UK only began ita lockdown 2 days ago, and the theory is that lockdowns take 2 weeks or more to work.

At first this might seem funny - rich folks don't get to golf! It's not. There is ~ZERO evidence these outdoor activities spread the virus. Thus for essentially no reason, the gov't is destroying businesses and banning private activities. First they came for the golfers...

> Hi Alex,

> Our county in Southern California, Riverside County, has just sent out orders that all golf courses, including private courses, will be shut down until June 10th to June 30th. You can't walk on them even far away from other people, much less play golf. The order extends far beyond golf courses and will be enforced by police, etc.
> This is so outrageous. Is anyone doing anything to organize against these blatantly anti-Constitutional acts?

An incredible chart: three countries had earlier and more effective “social distancing” than any others: France, Italy, and Spain - the three countries with the WORST epidemics. Wonder why. (Maybe because most transmission is intrafamilial and nosocomial? Just spitballing here.)

The @stanford antibody testing is out - it estimates ~3% of people in Santa Clara County (CA) have been infected and recovered, 50-plus times the estimate of confirmed active cases. More evidence #SARSCoV2 is far more widespread and thus less dangerous than expected.

without seroprevalence data to inform epidemic parameters. We measured the seroprevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara County, California, on 4/3-4/4. 2,300 adult county residents [illegible] to SARS-CoV-2 using a lateral flow immunoassay. Participants were recruited using Facebook ads targeting a representative sample of the county by demographic and geographic characteristics. We report the prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in a sample of 3,330 people, adjusting for zip code, sex, and race/ethnicity. We also adjust for test performance characteristics using 3 different estimates: (1) the test manufacturer's claim, (2) a sample of 37 positives and 30 negatives controls tested at Stanford, and (3) a pooled analysis of both. Results The unadjusted prevalence of antibodies to SARS-CoV-2 in Santa Clara [illegible] The population prevalence of SARS-CoV-2 antibodies in Santa Clara County implies that the infection is much more widespread than indicated by the number of confirmed cases. Population prevalence estimates can now be used to calibrate epidemic and mortality projections.

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

you don't do it Chotiner-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it.

No, counting pneumonia deaths probably increases accuracy. Whatever the lab test shows, one can argue if the flu (or COVID) killed someone with severe underlying conditions who didn't have pneumonia - but a pneumonia diagnosis along with a positive test means real lung damage.

That's what I was thinking right from the beginning! If covid is a respiratory disease harming lungs.. shouldn't there be a pneumonia too? But if you look at cdc site, there are much less deaths from covid+pneumonia than just from covid..

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and don't mean to say this case is proven, but there is considerable evidence for it.

Further, the University of Washington model was released after the lockdowns began, and explicitly accounted for their effects - yet it was still very wrong.

> Do you think the acute crisis has passed in New York City? And how do you define acute crisis?

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. That's how I define acute crisis. Initially, we were told that the point of the lockdowns was to "flatten the curve" - to reduce the

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has gifted coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbler-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered [in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview]. You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

Just one example: we have ~6,000 overdose deaths a month in the US. If those have doubled since mid-March (as data points from multiple jurisdictions suggest) - that's 15,000 extra deaths - a huge share of overall excess mortality. Even a 1/3 increase would be 5,000 more deaths.

4/ At more length:

all clear that lockdowns help to reduce spread in the short-term - and in fact they may actually worsen it and thus worsen the health system strain they are meant to prevent. I don't mean to say this case is proven, but there is considerable evidence for it.

Further, the University of Washington model was released after the lockdowns began, and explicitly accounted for their effects - yet it was still very wrong.

> Do you think the acute crisis has passed in New York City? And how do you define acute crisis?

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. That's how I define acute crisis. Initially, we were told that the point of the lockdowns was to "flatten the curve" - to reduce the

3/ In fact, the paper states explicitly "that U.S. hospitals could absorb a maximum of 26,000 to 56,000 additional ventilators at the peak of a national pandemic, as safe use of ventilators requires trained personnel."

4/ In other words, whatever happens with COVID, if we built a million new ventilators, 950,000 would be furniture.

Added bonus: the paper reports the US already has far more critical care beds per-capita than other nations: 35 per 100,000, compared to 12 in Italy, 7 in the UK...

5/ Here's a link to the paper (thoughtfully provided by the Times) so you can read and judge it for yourself.

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

2/ He now says both that the U.K. should have enough ICU beds and that the coronavirus will probably kill under 20,000 people in the U.K. - more than 1/2 of whom would have died by the end of the year in any case bc they were so old and sick.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 3月26日

3/ Essentially, what has happened is that estimates of the viruses transmissibility have increased - which implies that many more people have already gotten it than we realize - which in turn implies it is less dangerous.

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 3月26日

4/ Ferguson now predicts that the epidemic in the U.K. will peak and subside within “two to three weeks” - last week’s paper said 18+ months of quarantine would be necessary.

5/ One last point here: Ferguson gives the lockdown credit, which is interesting - the UK only began ita lockdown 2 days ago, and the theory is that lockdowns take 2 weeks or more to work.

6/ Not surprisingly, this testimony has received no attention in the US - I found it only in UK papers. Team Apocalypse is not interested.

Because we know he's wrong... look at italy. Look at spain. The humans in those countries are not unique. it took china 2 full months of total totalitarian style lockdown to get down to levels where even their government that tried to cover this up is starting to reopen.

Professor Ferguson now says there is no difference between last week's model and what he said yesterday. I would urge folks to read the initial paper - available here imperial.ac.uk/media/imperial … - and yesterday's comments and decide for themselves.

For 18 months! (Or potentially even longer, until a vaccine was created.) And even so the paper ended by saying "it is not at all certain that suppression will succeed long term." Like I said, people should read and judge for themselves.

1/ Morning folks. Wondering why @CDCgov is using such aggressive rules for death counts? Look - there's considerable evidence #COVID infections have peaked in the US. Even the POTUS comments last night warning about this being the "toughest week" suggest as much (deaths lag)...

2/ And the emerging data out of Florida, Southern California, etc suggest that this virus - like most respiratory viruses - doesn't do well when the weather warms and UV rays get stronger. Great news! Right? Right? Well... we're at under 9,000 deaths now.

65 231 813

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · Apr 5

3/ Suppose the president is right. And this is the "toughest week." And we average 1,500 deaths a day. That gets us to almost 20,000 deaths by April 12. By then the trend should clearly be down, I don't think it will be arguable...

34 206 666

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · Apr 5

4/ 20,000 deaths, with perhaps that many more coming over the next month (deaths lag). That's terrible! Yeah. It is. But [illegible] is estimating 24,000-63,000 flu deaths this year.

This is insane. How would the lockdown have accomplished this? And if it didn't, what did? Herd immunity b/c this has been here for months? What are the possible explanations?

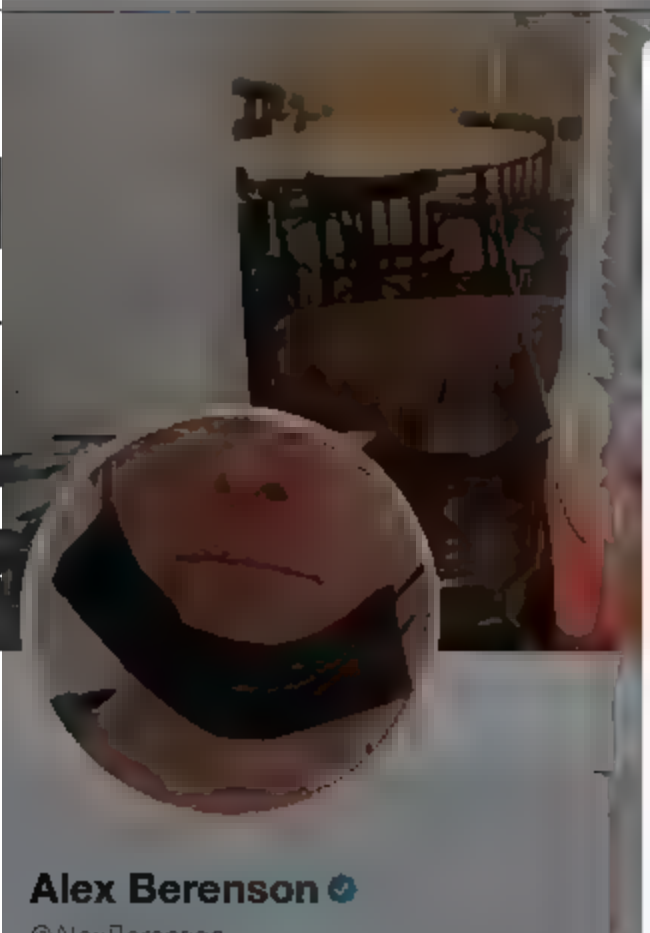
1/ #COVID—19 is devastating hospitals and employees nationally. But not for the reason you think. They are empty - prepared for a surge that has not come - and burning cash. An executive reports his group's stronger hospitals have "months" of cash; the weaker ones have "weeks."

about 15 other CFOs



- Seeing decline in volume about 40% and similar revenue cut – his low was about 50% cut in volume but only about 2-5% COVID
- Outpatient basically is a zero
- Only exception is hot spots which have a lot of volume but much lower revenue and higher cost because of PPE
- A reasonable way to think about it is down 40-60% at the peak
- No one expects to recapture everything they lost
- Staff
  - Not flexing yet
  - Post spike in likely have to make some adjustments
  - Could take 40% off of earnings and need to reduce staffing by 10% but not close to enough
- Longer term impact

Time to start using more straightforward language and calling out people who don't tell the truth, like @pbump. The original model explicitly accounted for the effect of lockdowns. It was wrong in real-time, embarrassingly so; that's why it's been updated. (It's still wrong.)

Philip Bump @pbump
A notable shift downward in projected deaths from coronavirus is already being spun as "experts were wrong!!" Instead of "hey, the thing experts said would drive down deaths might be driving down deaths."

1/ Wow. Stunning finding out of Boston. Researchers tested 408 homeless people for [illegible]. 147, or 36%, had the virus. BUT NEARLY ALL WERE ASYMPTOMATIC - only one had a fewer and two had shortness of breath.

Content of this paper

COVID-19 outbreak at a large homeless shelter in Boston: Implications for universal testing

Travis P Baggett, Harrison Keyes, Nora Sporn, Jessie M Gaeta
doi: https://doi.org/10.1101/2020.04.12.20059618

This article is a preprint and has not been certified by peer review [what does this mean?]. It reports new medical research that has yet to be evaluated and so should not be used to guide clinical practice.

from a single large homeless shelter in Boston, Boston Health Care for the Homeless Program conducted symptom assessments and polymerase chain reaction (PCR) testing for SARS-CoV-2 among all guests residing at the shelter over a 2-day period. Of 408 participants, 147 (36.0%) were PCR-positive for SARS-CoV-2. COVID-positive individuals were more likely to be male ($p<0.001$) but did not differ significantly from COVID-negative individuals with respect to other demographic and clinical characteristics. Cough (7.5%), shortness of breath (1.4%), and fever (0.7%) were all uncommon among COVID-positive individuals. Our findings illustrate the rapidity with which COVID-19 can be widely transmitted in a homeless shelter setting and suggest that universal PCR testing, rather than a symptom triggered approach, may be a better strategy for identifying and mitigating COVID-19 among

@AlexBerenson

2/ People keep asking why the virus hasn't spread widely among huge homeless populations and encampments like those in Los Angeles - but this paper suggests that it may already have come and gone in those settings, and we just didn't realize it.

It's happening. My coworkers sister went to the hospital, tested positive for Covid and they said she couldn't go home unless her husband also had it.

So he had to go in, tested negative so they forced her to go to a hotel they have set up for covid patient. This is in MA.

"It is impossible to stop the emergence of clusters just by testing many people," Oshitani says. This led them to urge people to avoid what they dubbed the "three Cs"—closed spaces, crowds, and close-contact settings in which people are talking face-to-face. It sounds simple. But, "This has been the most important component of the strategy," Oshitani says.

Just one example: we have ~6,000 overdose deaths a month in the US. If those have doubled since mid-March (as data points from multiple jurisdictions suggest) - that's 15,000 extra deaths - a huge share of overall excess mortality. Even a 1/3 increase would be 5,000 more deaths.

1/ So this tweet about pneumonia deaths in Florida, claiming the state usually has far fewer pneumonia deaths than it has had this year, is - how do I put this politely? - NOT TRUE. NOT AT ALL. (Though it has now been retweeted 4K+ times and is starting to take off.) Let's look.

You have my answers. I was very clear on the terms of the interview. If you do anything but run them in one long single Q+A with no additional commentary, i will just publish this email chain when you run them, and people can judge for themselves whether you acted in good faith.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to 'flatten the curve' - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

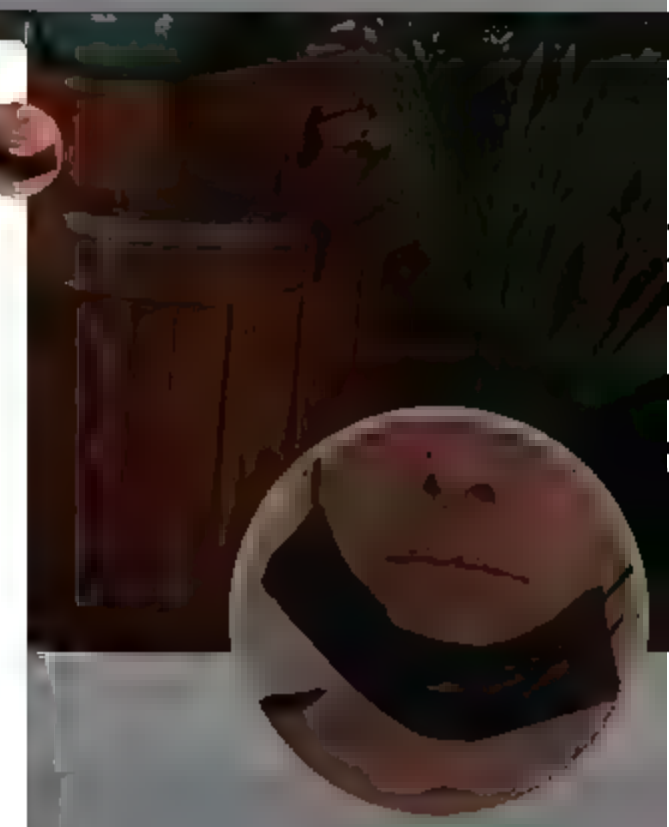
It's happening. My coworkers sister went to the hospital, tested positive for Covid and they said she couldn't go home unless her husband also had it.



So he had to go in, tested negative so they forced her to go to a hotel they have set up for covid patient. This is in MA.

Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that's not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a 'surge' that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

It's well established that COVID-19 death tolls are undercounts. That's important for people to understand, and it's important for people to look at excess mortality data.

There's no particular evidence that there's more undercounting in Florida, Georgia or Texas.

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and Sheriffs need to step up during this situation. Seriously you took an OATH. Every sheriff in the country should be doing this. You will gain respect from those who voted for you which is mostly what they want. As a vet it annoys me that more cops are not stepping up during this.

I wish someone who is an expert on vital statistics - from @cdcgov or elsewhere - could clear up the pneumonia deaths question, because it's now clear the weekly national surveillance numbers are much higher than the annual totals (and the gap long predates COVID).

Where (other than the screenshot of a PDF you posted yesterday) do you see the higher P&I deaths in Florida? Is it possible that it was a bad chart and you were wrong?

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · May 28

No. The national numbers have the same discrepancy - they show 3,000-6,000 deaths per week, every week. (These are weekly figures - the US has on average 50,000-60,000 deaths a week, so 6% would be 3,000.)

It has an IFR between 0.5 and 1.1%. If left unchecked, we would have overwhelmed most urban areas. We could have limited the shutdown if we had acted earlier and better. We also knew less then than we do now, so it is easier to judge in hindsight.

They will eventually adjust. From this wave, 0.18% of NYS will have died (with under-counting). If you believe that 20% of NYS is already infected, that would imply 0.9% IFR. If you think 33%, then 0.54% IFR.

You can do the same thought experiment in Sweden, Italy, etc.

Sweden's under 80 population (no lockdown) has fared much better than US under 80 population (perpetual lockdown) per the deaths/M metric.
Sweden has much heavier old-age population % distribution than US.

Brit is right about this. But the flip side - that wearing a mask is a concession to pseudoscience and government control we cannot afford to make - outweighs being nice in my view. (I suspect Brit is nicer than I am.)

Btw: I realized today that mass incarceration has been a big part of the US coronavirus problem, but not for the reason we expected. It's not that prisons have turned into "tinderboxes of death," as hysterics like [illegible] predicted when they begged for criminals to be freed...

Bail Someone Out of Jail Today

Covid-19 is an unfolding catastrophe in America's houses of detention.

By Nell Barsky
Mr. Barsky is the chairman and founder of the Marshall Project.

April 14, 2020

there is something you can do. You can very possibly save a life by bailing someone out of jail.

A human catastrophe is unfolding inside America's houses of detention. As the virus continues its spread, [illegible] prisoners and detainees [illegible] to officials are living on [illegible] check by jowl, vulnerable to the highly contagious scourge, poorly supplied with protective gear and unable to practice social distancing. [illegible] would likely be just [illegible].

"The [illegible] is going to be New York," said Vera Eidelman, director and founder of the Net[illegible]ent Project. Not only is [illegible] that allocates money to local bail funds around the country, "We are literally creating [illegible] of death."

Around the country, scores of local bail funds and community-based organizations are frantically trying to raise money to secure the release of people in jail and immigrants in detention centers. These people have not been convicted of crimes; they are typically incarcerated while they await trial, too poor to post bail or bond to secure

Just one example: we have ~6,000 overdose deaths a month in the US. If those have doubled since mid-March (as data points from multiple jurisdictions suggest) - that's 15,000 extra deaths - a huge share of overall excess mortality. Even a 1/3 increase would be 5,000 more deaths.

Meanwhile, back to lockdowns - a report from the free state of Texas (don't read if you live in NY or another nanny state, you will be impossibly jealous):

Hello Alex,

I'm a big fan of your work of late, and a proud member of team reality. One thing that I'm certain that the members of Team Apocalypse are unaware of is that those of us living in the "free" states have been living well outside the government guidelines for weeks/months. Since mid April, kids have been gathering for play dates en masse after "school" every day, restaurant order pickups have regularly been happy hours with 30+ people drinking from red solo cups waiting on their orders, competitive youth sports teams have been practicing (you can find evidence of this all over Facebook if you try), and on and on. Essentially, outside of the CBD, which is a ghost town because the office towers have no choice but to follow the "25% occupancy" orders (though

So, my anecdotal account, which seems to back up the vast majority of research, is that numbers continue to go down in Texas not just because we have a governor who is reopening "quickly," but because we have a populace that by and large joined team reality long ago.

For your viewing pleasure, this is a picture of the restaurant I had dinner at tonight (the part you do not see is the line out the entrance because the tables and the bar are full). Our server said it is this packed every night since they first opened a little over a week

Further, the University of Washington model was released after the lockdowns began, and explicitly accounted for their effects - yet it was still very wrong.

> Do you think the acute crisis has passed in New York City? And how do you define acute crisis?

For several days, new hospitalizations have been effectively flat in New York State (including the city), which means that New York hospitals are no longer facing a major wave of new cases that threatens to overwhelm them. That's how I define acute crisis. Initially, we were told that the point of the lockdowns was to "flatten the curve" - to reduce the

One other point - we were told the initial point of the lockdowns was to "flatten the curve" - to reduce the strain on the health-care system. Hospitalizations are the key metric of that standard too. And by all evidence, the health-care system in the US is not under strain. In fact, that is not quite true - it is under strain, but from lack of use. Hospitals are laying people off and in some cases closing because they are so empty. They have canceled elective surgeries and discharged patients to prepare for a "surge" that has not happened. This fact alone should make anyone question the general pandemic narrative.

Besides, riots make for great visuals, way better than a stupid virus where you're stuck with a stalling DeathMeter (TM) and talking about Peru (Peru?).

Do I sound cynical? If the last six weeks have taught me anything, it is that it is impossible to be too cynical.

Sheriffs need to step up during this situation. Seriously you took an OATH. Every sheriff in the country should be doing this. You will gain respect from those who voted for you which is mostly what they want. As a vet it annoys me that more cops are not stepping up during this.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

you don't do it Chotiner-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it.

What is the media getting wrong about the coronavirus crisis?

When and why did you personally start to doubt the official narrative of the COVID crisis?

What is your medical and public health background?

How do you answer people who say that the earliest, most dire projections of COVID's impact have been avoided

The lockdown mayors and governors and media had almost two months to accept reality and change course. Instead all that's changed is that we now have 40 million out of work. And cities are burning. Congrats @jedshug. Reality always wins. But sometimes it's a Pyrrhic victory.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has gifted coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

You have my answers. I was very clear on the terms of the interview. If you do anything but run them in one long single Q+A with no additional commentary, i will just publish this email chain when you run them, and people can judge for themselves whether you acted in good faith.

Hi Alex,

I'm a reporter with VICE and I'm interested in doing a Q&A with you about your coronavirus work. Your positions on COVID and COVID guidelines have certainly struck a nerve with many people and I think a straightforward Q&A--where you can lay out where and how media has biffed coverage of the coronavirus and I can ask you follow up questions about it--would be legitimately useful for our readers. I'm envisioning a fairly free-flowing discussion which I would then transcribe for publication.

Is this something you'd be interested in?

I'm very short on time. If you want to ask questions over email I will try to answer them, but only on the condition you don't do it Chatbar-style and annotate or second-guess me after I have answered (in other words, it would have to be the equivalent of a live on-air interview). You ask, I answer, that's the end of it

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

Although SARS-2-COV is a real virus that appears to pose a serious threat to the elderly and some people with chronic conditions, we have increasing evidence that its risks have been overstated - certainly to the general population under 50 and especially to anyone under 30, and that the draconian lockdowns we have undertaken may have economic, educational, and

So this is an excellent point: what exactly would funeral directors do now to prepare for deaths in three months? Order some more backhoes? Cancel August vacay just in case? Not like it's a seasonal business anyway.

Replying to @AlexBerenson

We dig graves at two cemeteries in north jersey. We haven't been told by any funeral directors to prepare for anything (and how would a funeral director "prepare" now for mass deaths in 2 months?). And we talk to them frequently and we would know.

A reasonable take... and I have mostly stayed quiet about cannabis the last couple of months. But in this case I felt I needed to say something.

I agree with both and on this. You've made your point and kudos for doing so as it takes courage to do so sometimes. But don't risk losing your momentum. Let's come back to the marijuana debate when the literal fires have been put out.

Welcome to the first mass protests in the age of wide use of ultra-high-potency THC products: seemingly calm in stretches, but paranoid, confused, directionless, and prone to bursts of random violence.

This is a very DC protest. Layfayette Square smells like weed and everyone is wearing a mask.

But you wanna blame the random violence on weed??????????????????????????????

Lots of factors are driving this violence: anger and fear from the Floyd case; misplaced fury over the devastation from lockdowns; sheer boredom. But cannabis causes dissociation and paranoia in lots of users, and that's a dangerous combination when a mob starts to build...

The funny thing about cruise ships is that the Diamond Princess pretty much gave us all the information we needed to know that covid wasn't a deadly plague but mainly a threat to the elderly. The antibody studies just confirmed what was in plain sight.

What is the media getting wrong about the coronavirus crisis?

Alex,

Thanks, I appreciate your time, and agree to run the Q&A verbatim. The questions are:

What is happening with the COVID crisis, in your view?

What is the media getting wrong about the coronavirus crisis?

When and why did you personally start to doubt the official narrative of the COVID crisis?

What is your medical and public health background?

How do you answer people who say that the earliest, most dire projections of COVID's impact have been avoided

I'm old enough to remember when @cdcgov said we'd have 3,000 deaths a day by June 1 (a prediction made ~three weeks ago - long after @ihme_uw blew up). Yep, that prediction is going to prove as accurate as all the others. Don't worry, the media will be sure to update the mistake!

As Trump Pushes to Reopen, Government Sees Virus Toll Nearly Doubling

An internal Trump administration model projects a near-doubling of daily coronavirus deaths by June 1 as the nation begins to reopen, as well as a rapid rise in daily infections.

Ironically, the body's response to lachrymators like tear gas is to cough, sneeze, and generally expel as much fluid as possible. You couldn't invent a better way to spread a respiratory pathogen if you tried.

So if any outdoor event can really cause mass infection, this is it.

Ominous! I disagree w/Berenson on this stuff, a lot, but when the question is if someone even gets to use a platform as big as Amazon's, you NEED to take a liberal stance. That's especially true here, given that health authorities haven't exactly showered themselves in glory.

I have not read 's book on the coronavirus. I suspect I would deeply dislike it - I disagree with many of his tweets, and think some are irresponsible. But, it is dangerous, unethical and a violation of American principles for to refuse to sell his book.

This morning @amazon told me they would not publish my booklet about the coronavirus. This is outrageous and dangerous - censorship from a company that has gained hugely from #COVID lockdowns - and has a near-monopoly on US book sales - especially with so many stores closed!

Bethany, you are the only "mainstream" journalist I've found looking at the Covid-19 crisis objectively. Thank you.
Is there a journalist/lawyer that can comments on publisher/platform - 1st amendment - censorship - liability?

That's a good question. Some of the pushback here is that AMZN is a private company that can do whatever it wants. But what it wants may be antithetical to our values, at least, what our values are supposed to be.

Saying Amazon is a private company like it's a random bookstore that doesn't have to carry books its owners don't like is absurd: it is hugely dominant in the book business and a huge gainer from government-imposed rules that have destroyed much of its competition since March.

I will. Everyone who's followed me on here the last few months can see I believe in free speech - whether you're protesting lockdowns or police violence, whether you are screaming angry slogans or occupying public spaces. As long as you aren't violent, your voice should be heard.

Thank you so much for all you've done—at least for me. I thought this was a scam from the beginning, and was ridiculed and called heartless. When I found you, I finally felt vindicated. Just made an Amazon purchase as a show of support—and thanks.

Yep, it's just me and those cherry-pickers at @CDCgov - you know, the federal agency that oversees the response to #COVID - whose best estimate is a 0.26% infection fatality rate.

Elon Musk Calls for Amazon Breakup in Latest Spat With Jeff Bezos

E-commerce giant's power as publisher questioned

Elon Musk blasted Amazon.com Inc. and its founder Jeff Bezos Thursday, after the online retail giant rejected a book about the coronavirus pandemic, a clash that highlights the power some big tech companies wield over speech.

The criticism from Mr. Musk, chief executive of Tesla Inc., came in response to a tweet by Alex Berenson. The author said that Kindle Direct Publishing, Amazon's outlet for self-

The issue of censorship - covert and overt - looks more and more like one of the defining issues of the social media/big tech era. @elonmusk gets it. And frankly it's refreshing to have the CEO of a massive company who says what he thinks - about cannabis and everything else.

Because libraries, as institutions, champion equity. In order to provide equity, we cannot be neutral. Neutrality favors the already powerful. We, as public librarians, specifically, have a duty to our communities, particularly the disadvantaged.

This is awful. 17 years ago, Howell Raines had to quit as editor of the NYT because a reporter he'd championed had made up stories and other reporters were rightly furious. Today James Bennet had to quit because his page ran an op-ed - FROM A SENATOR - that made reporters mad...

Sounds about right. Up to 2/3s of those people would have died this year anyway; the US has roughly 55,000 deaths a week. A choice between blowing up society or a 3% higher death rate (worst-case, and assuming lockdowns work at all, which is iffy at best) is no choice at all.

So @elonmusk and I don't agree on this. What the enemies of #teamreality don't get is: it doesn't matter. What counts more than any one issue - no matter how vital - is a commitment to open debate, honest reporting, free information, and hearing all opinions. NO CENSORSHIP!

I'd say the transformation of @nytimes into an explicitly left-wing paper is about 60% complete - the question is whether the Times will go all the way, and how much pain older staffers will feel. For @washingtonpost even more. But there are no examples on the other side.

"Long-haul" COVID fits nicely. The symptoms are vague enough to encompass almost anything, the illness garners attention and sympathy, and the support groups are big and vocal. Just like Lyme and fibro.

These folks are suffering from something. It's probably not COVID, though.

And this assumes the COVID death rate won't continue to drop; it probably will. It has in the US already; it has all over Europe, and as long as we work on protecting nursing homes, it should continue to do so.

Alex, my 93 yr old dad died this week outside of Chicago of natural causes. His death cert came back with covid listed as the cause.He was never tested, we fought it and got it changed. Corruption is rampant in Ill and I'm sure deaths due to covid f falsely inflated.

Exactly.

50% or more covid deaths originated in nursing homes. That is where the focus should be.

No, and I think the lack of tracking of recoveries is very telling. We don't track people who've recovered from influenza either, or don't chase long-term outcomes in people who have noroviruses. They get sick, they get better, it's over...

Now Team Apocalypse has begun to report on "long-haul" "COVID" "survivors." But many of these folks NEVER EVEN HAD A POSITIVE TEST.

There's a history of chronic "syndromes" which mainly affect people with anxiety and depression and for which evidence of physical illness is thin.

4 11 96

Alex Berenson @AlexBerenson · 1h

"Long-haul" COVID fits nicely. The symptoms are vague enough to encompass almost anything, the illness garners attention and sympathy, and the support groups are big and vocal. Just like Lyme and fibro.

That's right - as far as I know, no health authority is asking people with a positive test to come in for a physical so they can be comprehensively checked and monitored. Which, again, is another sign of how seriously we (don't) take SARS-COV-2.

They find almost no correlation between individual lockdown policies and ANY meaningful change in growth (to get around this little problem they create two catch-all categories called "other social distance" and "home isolation" which supposedly produce results.)

If the US made any bad decisions it wasn't the choice to lockdown by itself. It was doing it too late, for too long & not the right way with a unified national plan/leadership. Alex focuses on the US & blames the lockdown but the US made other mistakes that negate that argument

Based on job postings, there's a large and growing gap in the pace of recovery between lockdown states (nearly all Democratic) and free states (overwhelmingly Republican). So far no benefit to Trump. We'll see if that changes.

The jobs recovery is uneven, with a growing partisan gap. Job postings have recently increased more -- after falling less -- in red metros than in blue metros.

And, oh yeah, since risk is so stratified by age, why are we forcing (as opposed to ALLOWING) people in low risk categories to take measures at all, even if there is some minor transmission risk? Why don't we worry about nursing homes, where 40-50% of deaths take place?

Or is the new rule that no one is ever allowed to get or spread any infectious disease? In that case, we'd better get a lot more aggressive about going after people with XDR TB and other nasties. But I'd bet those kind of quarantines aren't high on your priority list.

Alex— what I'm understanding from your tweets is that you agree that masking is important in high-risk settings— & probably less important when you're jogging by yourself outside. I don't disagree

So why did your tweet say "not now, not ever"?

Replying to

High-risk settings: hospitals, nursing homes, maybe a few confined and crowded and unsanitary indoor workplaces (meatpacking plants), maybe subways, maybe maybe other public transportation. You want masks to be required there for a while, so be it. That's not what's being pushed.

Hey @beauwillimon, remember when Texas was gonna need federal assistance to cope with ALL THAT DEATH?

> @BeauWillimon

> So Texas is going to re-open. When they have a spike in covid cases they will ask for more federal assistance. Annually, Texas receives more federal funding than it pays in taxes. So donor states like New York will be footing their bill. @GovAbbott knows this. Also...more death.

It's too easy. I don't even have to read timelines. I just google "COVID" "deaths" (or "devastation," or "overrun," or "Ozarks," or "Papa Bear") along with the name of the blue-check, and up the idiocy comes. Not "protest," though. That never works.

Wow. @facebook now apparently believes it should be fact-checking @cnbc and @who - it is calling the @CNBC article that accurately reported on the WHO's findings on asymptomatic transmission of #COVID being rare as "partly false."

Wisconsin Sees Coronavirus Spike 2 Weeks After Abrupt Reopening

Nicholas Reimann Forbes Staff

Business

I'm a news reporter for Forbes, primarily covering the U.S. South.

TOPLINE Wisconsin has seen some of its highest single-day new case counts of coronavirus in the past few days, with deaths and hospitalizations also rising just two weeks after the state Supreme Court struck down the governor's stay-

Remember, the US has 50 states, and the baseline COVID hospitalization and death numbers are small enough in many of them that random short-term fluctuations are possible. The overall picture is clear - the end of lockdowns has not led to an appreciable increase in cases...

And this is why you are seeing stories written with Memorial Day as a baseline. Lockdowns didn't end Memorial Day. (Tbh there were some big events that might have spread infections last week, but we aren't supposed to talk about that link. "Memorial Day" is a polite euphemism.)

The lesson couldn't be clearer. Last year, [redacted] ran this piece from me. There's no way that would happen now. The transformation of the Times into the New York Village Voice just took another big step forward.

This is awful. 17 years ago, Howell Raines had to quit as editor of the NYT because a reporter he'd championed had made up stories and other reporters were rightly furious. Today James Bennet had to quit because his page ran an op-ed - FROM A SENATOR - that made reporters mad...

@NickAtNews Nicholas Bogel-Burroughs
Inbox: James Bennet is out as opinion editor of The New York Times after the publication of the "Send in the Troops" op-ed by Sen. Tom Cotton that led to outrage among staff and readers....

Keep in mind that it's now clear BOTH that children are at roughly zero risk from the virus (heard anything about the pediatric syndrome lately? Me neither)... and that distance learning isn't even distance babysitting.

Other foreign editions are coming too, though rights to the other big European countries remain available for now. (A reader actually translated the book into German himself, but I'm a little nervous to put it out that since I can't read it.)

BTW - this was a true partnership...

A 50/50 split of the ebook net revenues after translation costs. No advance necessary. I am happy to make the same deal everywhere. So if you're a publisher in Germany or Italy or Spain, say hi!

But yes, if I can't find publishers in the rest of Europe in the next few days, maybe I'll just go with reader-translated editions... based on the responses I'm seeing here, it seems to be a realistic possibility.

Thrilled to report the first translation of "Unreported Truths" should be on sale within days! I want to thank @ta entaditions - my French partner - for working to blow up every stereotype I had about the French (and publishing). Details on pricing/distribution to come.

1/ So I have kept quiet about this, but I have to speak out. [redacted] has booked and canceled me three times in the last two weeks. First they were going to have me alone. Then they said they would only have me in a debate (because I'm such a conspiracy theorist, lol)...

2/ Fine. Not perfect but fine. [redacted] and [redacted] - whom I have known for decades - are at each other's throats about lockdowns, and if a debate format is the admission price, so be it. I WANT EVERYONE TO HEAR THE TRUTH, and I will go on anywhere, no preconditions...

3/ So I agree. They tell me my debate counterpart is going to be Dr. Zeke Emanuel. Fine. We agree to Monday June 1. Date and time set.

Over the weekend he cancels. Which means I don't get to come on.

Okay. The book comes out last Thursday. #1 Kindle, blah blah.

Tony Blair, ex-British prime minister and voice of the center-left establishment, says serfs (I mean citizens, whoops!) should have to carry digital proof they're healthy.

Our betters. So well-meaning. So caring. They won't stop caring until we stop them.

At this point we have no idea. Maybe higher without a lockdown, maybe the same, maybe lower (there's decent real-world evidence for this case, which I will discuss in part 2 of Unreported Truths.) The big country that took the fewest measures, Japan, has had the mildest epidemic.

Doesn't particularly matter but both @nytimes and @usatoday refused to include Unreported Truths on their bestseller lists (it should have been top 3-5 on both). The excuse will probably be that it was too short/cheap.

People act like these lockdowns are the normal response to a contagious disease. It was a theoretical approach that hadn't been tried before this. Why does everyone assume it was the correct approach?

Because some people can't comprehend nuance & they prefer being told what to do. Because nuance isn't allowed, what they hear HAS to be applied to all, or else their little snowflake worlds collapse into chaos.
Also because the media doesn't understand science & how it works.

THIS has been my argument from the beginning. COVID19 is a natural disaster. What we are seeing across the country (& world) is a man-made disaster. What's worse... it is a government-mandated disaster. As usual, the government's "solution" made the problem much, much worse.

I am NOT saying that a government system necessarily makes matters worse - I am saying that it, like the lockdowns themselves, seems largely irrelevant and short-term/regional factors matter much more. But wow the left has larded this conversation up with lots of nonsense.

Apparently @cdcgov doesn't have anyone on its staff who has ever worked at or eaten at a restaurant. Sure, gwan! Just make sure to keep your mask on!

social media to see if they have updated their information to address any COVID-19 safety guidelines.

- Before you go to the restaurant, call and ask if all staff are wearing cloth face coverings while at work.
- Wear cloth face coverings when less than 6 feet apart from other people or indoors.
- Take precautions – like wearing a cloth face covering as much as possible when not eating and maintaining a proper social distance if you are dining with others who don't 11 of the deaths the NC DHHS posted today were from May. (One from 5/8). Part of that is on the local counties doing data dumps though. I notice the spike in 3 counties reporting yesterday, then laughed when I saw the dates of death today.

It would be interesting to see if we could push into the public discourse a conversation about reconciling the hysteria around videos coming out of Wuhan of people collapsing in the street

Versus what we actually witnessed here. Mass delusion people aren't acknowledging this

Me, I'm more in favor of "defunning the police" - which means a sharp cut in the boys-with-toys nonsense, no more no-knock raids for mid-level drug dealers or SWAT teams geared like infantry or patrol officers with Tasers.

Pretty sure tasers were issued to reduce the use of lethal weapons.

Yes, they were. Especially for female officers who cannot handle a larger person on their own. They don't even really teach use of the baton anymore because the Taser is the first choice for compliance.

Whatever you think of him, @realdonaldtrump is the President. He's about to speak to the West Point graduating class - young officers we may ask to fight and die for us. And this is what @cnn is showing right now. (Yes, even @MSNBC is covering the speech. CNN has lost its mind.)

Not really. That was what was so striking. He spent a great deal of it congratulating the cadets and talking about the traditions of the military and universal values and how the US has fought for them.

Quite the chart. From federal campaign data on political giving by profession:

"Military" is 40% D, 60% R.
Police 49% D, 51% R.
Only one, "fossil fuels," is over 72% R.

In contrast, 15 professions skew over 80% D - including "academia," which is 90%.

Hi Alex, I purchased your new book on COVID in iBooks, but's in a foreign language. I'm a US Apple customer, and had the English language selected.

Do you have any idea how I might get the correct version of this?

Одни толкователи видят в нем краткое изложение даосской метафизики, другие – наставление в личном совершенствовании, третьи - суть военной стратегии, четвертые - принципы управления государством и т. д. В действительности перед нами не метафизический фрагмент и не технический инструмент, а свидетельствование о самых что ни на есть естественных основаниях человеческого бытия, эскиз феноменологии человеческой практики, в которой нечто новое, смутно предчувствуемое, еще не отличившееся в слова всегда следствует с плодами рефлексии, устойчивыми и общеизвестными понятиями. BTW, if one does a deep dive into the Florida ICU data (not naming names, I'd say I have too much time on my hands, but I don't), one may notice the big counties with the smallest % of open beds are in north Florida - where COVID is least prevalent. False alarm #2,000,000,000.

2/ Ultimately, most of those folks will be discharged, but if the hysteria gets worse, more will come in. That's probably why the number of hospitalizations has risen 500+ since May 26, but Covid ICU and ventilator use by less than 100, or four or five a day.

Hospitalizations with COVID-19 are not the same as BECAUSE of COVID-19. People finally going to the hospital for "elective" procedures who happen to test positive for COVID-19 are going to artifically inflate the numbers making it look like a "second wave".

If I recall, patients are tested prior to admission, and if positive they are listed as a Covid hospitization irrespective of the medical state that occasioned their visit.

A very large randomized trial, as it happens. 6000+ patients.

A total of 2104 patients were randomised to receive dexamethasone 6 mg once per day (either by mouth or by intravenous injection) for ten days and were compared with 4321 patients randomised to usual care alone. Among the patients who received usual care alone, 28-day mortality was highest in those who required ventilation (41%), intermediate in those patients who required oxygen only (25%), and lowest among those who did not require any respiratory intervention (13%).

Dexamethasone reduced deaths by one-third in ventilated patients (rate ratio 0.65 [95% confidence interval 0.48 to 0.88]; p=0.0003) and by one fifth in other patients receiving oxygen only (0.80 [0.67 to 0.96]; p=0.0021). There was no benefit among those patients who did not require respiratory support (1.22 [0.86 to 1.75; p=0.14).

Based on these results, 1 death would be prevented by treatment of around 8 ventilated patients or around 25 patients requiring oxygen alone

One thing I find frustrating is everyone's so interested in debating the politics of COVID that there's less and less public discussion of relevant epidemiological parameters, including/especially by people who are in a position to speak authoritatively about them (i.e. not me).

Some Q's I have:

—How many people suffer from long-term complications?
—Is the IFR declining, and if so why?
—How much of the population is susceptible to COVID-19? Is there cross-immunity from other coronaviruses?
—How much do heterogeneities affect the herd immunity threshold?

Very few.
Probably, but we can't be sure because it was probably overestimated at the start.
We don't know for sure, but a lot of people are settling on a range of maybe 60-70 percent. There's probably some cross-immunity.
This is a math/modeling question with an answer.

Your mistake is thinking that, in 2020, journalism's currency is factual information and insightful reporting. It's not; the currency is narrative building. Facts are a nuisance, and they're not even worth a few bucks to hunt down.

There is no journalism left, at least very little. It's all extremism. Web and 24 hr garbage make competition for eyeballs resort to crazy articles. Now they censor what they deem adverse opinions.

Part of being on ... is being grounded in data. And not denying when it moves unexpectedly. Which is why the AZ/FL/TX case and hospitalization data bears close watching. Doesn't mean panic. But this is the first time in months when I've genuinely felt surprised.

Let's be clear: I can easily pick it apart and raise questions. But that's exactly what the hysterics in the media have done for months as the picture has brightened; its important to watch the topline too, and not fall in the trap of squeezing data for the sake of squeezing.

I'd like to see number of hospitalizations/deaths in the headline, or first paragraph, of every one of these alarmist articles. The "number of cases" that's constantly trumpeted is no more relevant than any other common illness if most of them are not seriously ill.

In FL the median age of a COVID case has been cut almost in half. It's possible the virus has run through the most vulnerable in nursing homes/ hospitals and those getting infected now are generally younger and healthier and spread it amongst each other Media breathlessly reports 'NEW CASES'! - Plain stupidity? given our source is journalists, this explanation has some weight. But for the same reason, it could also represent a purposeful attempt to highlight the only aspect of the terror they have left.

I agree Trump is making a mistake here. But the funny part is that unlike the Times reporters who got James Bennet forced out, the President actually lacks the power to censor views he doesn't like. In the US in 2020, only the woke can cancel culture.

> Matthew Yglesias @mattyglesias
> It really is perfect that after a week where Tom Cotton's op-ed and cancel culture were front and center we get a straight-up "the President of the United States is trying to censor a book" controversy so we can see who is and is not totally full of shit.

I predict the tune on school closures will change once the teachers unions see a large increase in parents that don't want to deal with shuffling Zoom classes again and just outright homeschool for the following year.

Two theories (beyond more focused testing and all the theories from yesterday): Many states will go through the same spike-decline cycle as NY/MI/Quebec/etc, it's just a function of timing. 2) Hot Sunbelt weather drives people inside and causes a (negative) lockdown-like effect.

It is a major leap for people to realize the FDA could suppress a drug that would end the plandemic. It's the big lie that media supports that prevents many from getting their mind around evil, especially when they were taught there is no evil.

Lots it talk of the spike in South Florida and people frothing at the mouth for another lockdown. I hate to even say this, but the word that popped into my head when this talk began again was familycide. You cannot push fear and hopelessness in people and take their income.

Hey, @ashtuite - I've been thinking a lot about how you said in March even if Ontario shut down through July it would have at least 28,000 patients in ICU. The actual peak was ~500. (Screenshots below.)

And I find myself wondering: Why would anyone listen to a word you say?

> Ashleigh Tuite @AshTuite
> I've been thinking a lot about the @SickKidsNews report on schools re-opening in Ontario and the response to that report. For me, what is so jarring about the report is the lack of nuance or acknowledgement of complexity in the recommendations. 1/

fight pandemic: U of T research

Severe restrictions on public life must continue for months, not weeks, for Ontario to stifle the coming surge of COVID-19 patients and give the health-care system a shot at coping with the pandemic, University of Toronto-led research suggests.

This suggests a couple of possibilities: recoding, or the reality that 1/2 or more of people who died from #SARSCoV2 would have died within months anyway. Overall, the picture is not one of an endless epidemic but a few bad weeks, and this is consistent practically everywhere.

So If by July the rest of the Clemson football team tests positive, and it's true they then have immunity, assuming there's football, will they then seperate themselves as the clear favorite to win the national title???

This is... interesting. As I said publicly today, I thought this event was a mistake. Large indoor rallies are more likely to produce spread than almost any other events, and with positive tests rising across the Sunbelt, giving the media hysterics ammunition is unnecessary.

But note how [illegible] words it: "12,673 are hospitalized, compared to 8,553 a month ago"

This strongly suggests to the reader that right now more Covid patients are in the hospital than there were one month ago.

But it doesn't technically say that.

Saddest part is that @johncassidy is generally a good reporter. And ~13,000 hospitalizations would be a big number - almost as many as NY at the peak. But the media is so in love with the disaster narrative, so ready to believe the worst, that that figure raises no eyebrows.

One of Germany's top economists - @shamburg - demolishes in one page the @neil_ferguson claim that lockdowns were useful, much less saved millions of lives. As he puts it, there's equal evidence sunspots worked.

criticized[1], provoked disastrous lockdown policies in both countries[2].

2. This month, Ferguson and his team (Flaxman et al.[3]) purport that lockdowns in 11 European countries had saved over three million lives.

3. Taking UK as an example of their reasoning, the authors do not prove but assume that infection dynamics (R_t) remained unchanged before 14 March and after 23 March:

4. However, official UK data show that the growth factor of corona deaths declined since end March. Since deaths follow infections with a lag of about 23 days, this implies that infection dynamics receded as early as February, i.e., long before the interventions.

5. Hence, infection dynamics receded continuously in UK. Assuming that infection dynamics were constant except at intervention points, Ferguson's model induces spurious discontinuities, as shown above.

6. If the authors had assumed that infection dynamics were driven by sunspots, and if sunspots had only changed on 1 April, their model had found profound influences of sunspots on corona infections. The authors' approach is complete nonsense, its results are worthless.[4]

From a reader who has tracked daily Florida hospital/ICU bed data for months. I have checked it myself enough to vouch for it. Of note, since late May Florida has had NO overall decline in ICU/general hospital bed capacity. POSITIVE TESTS HAVE SPIKED. NOTHING ELSE. @johncassidy

So this is somewhat convincing, especially along with the Ontario/Quebec data and the fact that Europe, where air conditioning is less common, has seen a sharper fall in cases than the US. Please note: the fact AC may spread #sarscov2 is NOT evidence for lockdowns. The reverse.

Timothy B. Lee ✓ @binarybits
I made a scatterplot comparing the change in coronavirus cases over the last two weeks to cooling degree days—a proxy for air conditioning use. (Thanks @jeremy_gibbs!) The hottest states have suffered the worst outbreaks.

Thanks for help from all of you, and especially @winnie, I have some survey data from child care centers which have been open in the pandemic. You can see

Kevin Carney @kevinbcarney · 8h
1 in 700 is low? Aggregate death rate of Pearl Harbor: 1 in 55,000. For 9/11: 1 in 95,000. Those death rates were high enough for us to go to war. But 1 in 700 is now low?

ProfEmilyOster @ProfEmilyOster · 8h
I think people should judge this for themselves but want to make sure you know this is cases not deaths or hospitalizations.

The correlation has broken down, even accounting for the lag. Nationally, positive test results (cases) have fallen much more slowly than hospitalizations or deaths. Still not entirely clear why; case mix by age may be the main factor, but better treatment could be helping too.

Saddest part is that [illegible] is generally a good reporter. And ~13,000 hospitalizations would be a big number - almost as many as NY at the peak. But the media is so in love with the disaster narrative, so ready to believe the worst, that that figure raises no eyebrows.
